PEREGRINE 70

Time has changed the things it could not steal,
but a memory gently sings colors even time cannot conceal.
York, it was youth and learning when we met, and my Soul was yearning to know, to wet my feet in your knowledgeable ponds.

I owe you the greatest debt, and our bonds will never fade
: there are too many impressions that you have made.

And as we seek the future
which you have allowed, we will remember your colors and sounds. When memory leaps and bounds, rummaging through the smells of an open book, or the chatter of a curious look, we will see your form, so true, so deep.
Let your regimented structures and curveless beams sample a pensive sleep, and let the living learn by your example
:fertile is the mind who dreams, ignorant is the eye who sleeps, and learnéd is the one who seeks .

Myself is a proud village with questions that seep into minds on the verge of sleep. Thyself is a city (with fingers so lithe)
standing your heights with lights so blithe .

let this village bask
in your lights: the answers who ask

Mr. Charles S. Downes- Headmaster

who are you
earth
(deeper than all secrets)
wholly cloaked in birth?
in winter's slowest kiss you dreamt your sleep of fertility while garbed in the slience of sterility. but the naked trees are greenly blushing and the brooks are laced with joy; residual snows can't possibly annoy the twigs so gently pushing pools of sleep become mad.
rains in Spring's insomnic savour, and the fertile earth feels the pains of seeds who moan in labour
who are you earth,
so full of mirth? each minute fragrance (with whom the wind contends) merrily laughs in a breeze, and a heart bends, swaying to the winds of an emotion. who strokes yours trees and tickles your streams?
and why does your self smell so of dreams?
all your days celebrate birth's infinite bliss; and seconds enter moments as lips would enter a kiss.
The mind of the wind rejoices, and happily voices its joys to the moon's orange stare and something tells me God is everywhere

:sirens on a sea of knowledge, all devoted to the solemn cause of sending us off to college.

Summer's now, pray, take a pause, and gather breath for the coming mass
of Sophomores, Juniors, and Senior class (with brains to be filled, and parents to be billed)

Cross your fingers, eyes,
and then,
hope like hell we don't happen again .

who is yourself
, dancing like a little elf and making flowers grow?
why do you know these things only one God understands?

to our halls you brought your diligent hands (flowers below, flowers above) and built your heaven of love.
Surely you're a god, or
